The Face Of The Inevitable

13 0 1

Chapter 1 by S to the M

"Can't you see that it's beautiful?" said Fred to his child, who was peering over the edge of the bridge, staring at the Grand Canyon. "It's not THAT pretty, daddy" said Max, his son. Fred sighed in exasperation.

"Do we really have to watch this?" I asked my mother. "Yes, you do. It's a very nice movie" she replied. We were in the cinema, watching a new movie called 'Over and Beyond' starring some random people I never bothered to know about. I slouched in my seat in boredom. My family (including my father and my elder sister) and I were in the cinema watching the movie that my parents had awaited for months. It wasn't interesting, something about how a father raises a child single-handedly.
